– What I'm doing, what I think about it, and what I find on my travels. An Idea, Bad Ideas and the First 500 A friend of mine, in response to a comment of mine he made during a conversation he was having with a friend of mine, asked if it is possible to advertise oneself, or promote oneself, or to put oneself out there? I told him that a non-savvy one might think that was the best way to do it. But I told him the best way was to, first of all, write and tell people how great you are. Then some of you will be able to judge your own worth, and be able to start managing your own image and putting yourself out there. Because, friends, a reputation is the currency of business. It is the one thing that distinguishes you from everyone else. It is the thing that can't be bought or sold. It is the one thing that can't be counterfeited. It is the most valuable commodity there is. I have a further thought for people who could have financial problems. I think that the 'fear factor' is probably the most important thing that could be used to make a person lose money or could be used to make money. In other words, what if you could sell the fear of losing money to the wealthy, who may not be as wealthy as they like to be? I can't think of what the economics might be like, but I can't help thinking that a good image could have a lot to do with such things. I think a photoshopped image of yourself would do something to sell a person an idea or write something about you. I think that people could be talked into a deal based upon a great image of a person or business that makes people excited about it. I think that it works. I'm not saying that good images are guaranteed a deal – that would be too easy. I'm just saying that it would be a good idea for a person to think about it. I think that selling a deal based upon an image is hard work, though, and I think that's why a 'real' image like a photograph would do much better. I think that I could do better at promoting my ideas, my writing and my site, if I had a better image. I think it would help sell more of my ideas, and I

An end wall and a roof panel are often rolled in the same manner as the panels. Not Applicable Side-wall roll forming machines are known in the art. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,898,058 describes a side-wall roll forming machine which includes a plurality of rollers which form and bend side-wall panels. One object of the present invention is to provide a side-wall roll forming machine which may be used to form a curved side-wall panel having a width of between 5 and 18 feet. Another object of the present invention is to provide a method of forming the curved side-wall which utilizes a single panel of curved shape having a lateral roll gap of a predefined width. Another object of the present invention is to provide a method of forming the curved side-wall which includes preforming the panel by rolling the panel as a first step to form a generally uniform flat or planar rolled panel surface, and thereafter rolling the panel between two rollers of circular cross-section to conform the surface to the contours of a side-wall form having a circular cross section. Another object of the present invention is to provide a method of forming the curved side-wall which utilizes a wedge means to hold a pre-fabricated panel of curved shape, and a wedge means for holding the pre-fabricated panel at the lateral roll gap. According to the present invention, a method of forming a curved side-wall of a curved form is provided. The method includes providing a side-wall form having a hollow, non-circular cross-section, and providing a pre-fabricated side-wall panel of generally uniform width and curved shape. The pre-fabricated side-wall panel includes a lateral roll gap which is generally the width of the panel. The method further includes holding the side-wall panel within the side-wall
