Alongside the incredibly painful news that Jimmy Kimmel is resuming his 'Joke' on December 3rd, coming out of hiding after a week, we have the news that Jimmy's 90-minute special, simply titled Jimmy Kimmel Live: The Concert is finally set to air. It'll be just in time for Winter Solstice, which is so cold. It would have been even better if we'd gotten to see it in July. The network announced the news on 'Jimmy Kimmel Live' via Kimmel himself, without any accompanying news about what Jimmy will be talking about. If you're wondering why the entire show is titled The Concert, it could just be because we'll be getting a performance. It's not clear what it will be yet, but Jimmy has done some awfully earnest shows before, including one in tribute to Nas and another one that honored Elvis Presley and Roy Orbison. Though Kimmel's show will still technically be a talk show, this performance will be the exception to the usual talk show format. And what better way to channel your inner Elvis than with some karaoke? The special will air in its entirety at 8:30PM ET on December 5th, just in time for the longest day of the year.

And while there is no saying if this show will have a new set of equipment, it will still be based in the same studio where Kimmel's talk show airs. Kimmel, who announced the return date last week, also revealed that this show is no one-time thing; he plans on doing three more in 2017. The first was taped around Christmas, and a third special will be set to air in the Spring
