

THE ANNUAL ROSE D'ORANGER SHOW AT THE THE BOUVET Никита Повзунов, писатель, публицист, радиопередатель.Q: what is the difference between isspace() and ws()? I am trying to filter a web page according to its tags. I found out ws() method is the one to use. But it's not clear to me. Let's see this part of the code: What's the difference between isspace() and ws()? A: The *is*space() function might appear to be more efficient, but it is not. isspace() is only efficient if you know the input string will only contain whitespace and such an assumption is invalid. ws() will eliminate white space from the start and the end of the string. This is a much better optimization than the *is*space() function since it will not destroy the input string's syntax. A: use ws (trim) and not isspace. As stated here: The isspace() function returns true if the given string contains only whitespace characters. This function is not recommended for parsing HTML or other document formats. Its performance will be very poor compared to strspn(), which is more appropriate for many applications. The *is*space() function uses an optimized C function designed to detect white space in a given string. A: ssp () is not going to be very efficient if a lot of whitespace is present in the content you want to parse. isspace() is a more basic method. If you really have to do this in PHP, isspace() is probably the best choice. Also, with ws() you can be sure that the returned string is stripped of all newlines and tabs, leaving only content: echo ws('abc\
