Q: Is there a way to combine our site and central design? There are a few themes out there where the site design and the desktop theme/layout look identical, with the same color scheme, fonts, etc. What I was thinking about (without the need to create new designs for every site) is creating a custom, centralized theme for the Stack Exchange network. The benefits of that are: No changes to the site-specific sites. The only site-specific design change would be to the Stack Overflow theme. No updating to every site's theme. Any changes to the theme would just need to be rolled out to the site. It's a centralized, unified theme. No design conflicts. Users of any site can get one-stop shopping access to the core design elements Any design updates/changes made to the central theme would affect all sites. If this is considered a good idea or a bad idea, I'd appreciate it if you were to comment about it. I can address any concerns you may have. I just thought I'd ask before I did the legwork. :) A: I'm not sure if this is a good idea, but it's certainly on the table. The trouble I see with it is in the question of what changes should be made to it. What we do to each site on the network is customized to it. This means that our sites have styling specific to their theme or branding (though you could argue that our branding is specifically more a part of our image than our look). You know what your site looks like and it's changed as we thought it should be. The problem is that a generic shared network theme would either look horrible or be a huge code rewrite. It would likely look horrible because (from my experience) users of this network theme would all have very different site-specific styling and preferences. This isn't a huge problem for SO because the site is such a far-out outlier in the network and most users of that network theme wouldn't even notice it. However, if we were to make this the network's default theme the problems I mentioned would become much more apparent and more prominent. There's also the problem of making sure that whatever is done is done in a way that is good for all the sites (as they are equal to each other, that means all the sites would be entitled to the benefit of any quality changes or fixes).

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a liquid crystal display module. More specifically, the invention relates to a liquid crystal display module which is excellent in external appearance. 2. Description of the Related Art Liquid crystal display (LCD) modules are used as display units of notebook type personal computers, word processors and the like. A plurality of modules is arranged in a row in a liquid crystal display device using a flat panel as a display panel. The modules are optically arranged in a direction perpendicular to the array direction of liquid crystal cells arranged in a matrix, thereby forming a large number of pixels. When this type of liquid crystal display device is used as a display unit, it is preferable to shield light leaked from modules and to improve the external appearance thereof. Accordingly, conventional modules are provided with a light shielding plate on the side of an end panel, which is a portion of a case formed with a display window or on the side of a back panel. The light shielding plate is formed in a predetermined shape by pressing a thin plate of a light shielding material, for example, an aluminum (Al) plate to the end panel or back panel (see JP-A-5-248086). However, the light shielding material is soft and relatively easy to deform, resulting in a problem in that the shape of the light shielding plate cannot be satisfactorily maintained. It is therefore an object of the present invention to prevent light leaking from a liquid crystal display module from being emitted to the outside. Another object of the present invention is to improve the external appearance of a liquid crystal display module. The other objects and features of the present invention will be more apparent from the following detailed description of preferred embodiments of the invention taken in conjunction with the accompanying drawings.Q: codeigniter подключается библиотека которая находится в другой папке Создаю новую тему, создаю модуль на которое подключаются все файл
