What's New In Photoshop CC 2018 Version 19?

The Washington Wizards are currently riding a five-game win streak. Kevin Durant is now a member of the Oklahoma City Thunder after being traded along with Serge Ibaka. Now, D.C. has a dilemma: Do they try to tank and fall further down the Eastern Conference standings in order to give their young core additional opportunities to develop, or do they try to win? It's a tough choice. There isn't a clear cut answer. The Wizards had already decided to make adjustments to their roster before Durant had left. As of last week, the only player they could acquire that would make a difference was Marcus Thornton. That didn't happen. It also didn't happen when Thaddeus Young was dealt to Indiana. There wasn't the right fit that made sense. That doesn't leave a whole lot of options. There is no one on the current roster they can acquire that will have a major impact. A quality draft pick might be able to do something, but we all know that the Wizards could have simply picked that player two weeks ago when they were in the lottery. They passed on him because of his health concerns. Now, we have another problem: John Wall. His game has greatly improved during the five-game win streak. He's starting to improve as a point guard at the defensive end. His scoring has taken a hit, but he's still the most talented player on the roster. The Wizards need Wall to be at his best if they want to continue winning. Now, a group of positive decisions could make up for all of that. Re-sign The Wizards only have one option this summer that makes sense: Re-signing John Wall. Money can be an issue. With a maximum salary of just $30 million, John Wall will likely command at least $70 million over the next three seasons, as it is unlikely that Wall would agree to a deal that cuts into his earning potential. That could make it hard to sign a shooter like J.J. Redick. Wall's game is becoming more polished as he enters his fifth season, and he has made clear his desire to continue to develop. His buyout option after this season is not a problem for the Wizards since Wall has already indicated his intent to return next season. Find a Rookie I'd prefer to see Wall return to D.C. next season as the face of the franchise. But this franchise isn't doing itself any favors if
