[Colorectal carcinoma in women. A prospective study of 80 cases]. To determine the clinicopathological characteristics of colorectal carcinoma in women. In a prospective study, we collected the data of 80 women who had undergone surgery for colorectal carcinoma. A comparative study was conducted using the clinical, radiological, pathological, and therapeutic data of these patients to evaluate the characteristics of colorectal carcinoma in women. There were no differences between the clinical and pathological data of women and men. The most common localization of lesions was the sigmoid and transverse colon and the most frequent signs of disease were abdominal discomfort and weight loss. The rate of local recurrence and of distant metastases were not significantly different in women and men (respectively 9.7% vs. 8.0% and 26.1% vs. 30.3%). However, women with tumor of the right colon had more recurrences than those with tumors in the left colon and rectum (13% vs. 8.3% and 12.7% vs. 5.3%). The proportion of women with T4 tumors was greater than in men (7.5% vs. 1.4%). No difference was found in the overall survival rates between women and men, but the women with T4 tumors who did not receive treatment had a shorter survival time than women without T4 tumors. Overall survival time was not influenced by the prognostic factors studied.Q: Блокировка экрана Android Есть простой активити, на которой выводится информация.
