Established in 1969, the China Association for Promoting Democracy refers to the people of China as the “Chinamen.” The name originated in the 19th century with British missionaries who were unhappy with the racist way Chinese were being portrayed. But the government of the People’s Republic of China has always taken a firm stance on the right to freedom of speech. For example, there are over 120 journalists in prison in China. The Chinese government routinely censors the Internet, shutting down websites considered illegal or too political. It has led to a strengthening of censorship practices in an attempt to prevent online criticism of the government. The Chinese government has banned books and writings that are “perceived to be anti-government, subversive or politically sensitive” for as long as the 1949 Communist Revolution. But although the Chinese government is known for its authoritarianism, many Chinese citizens still cling to freedom of speech. Here is a list of the top 10 banned books in China that remain in circulation today. 1. Feng Zhi’s The Private Life of Chairman Mao (1969) Headed “Chairman Mao’s sex life,” this book features a variety of photos of Chairman Mao enjoying some form of sexual activity. The book was first published in 1969 and was banned in 1978. It is still not distributed in China to this day. 2. Zhu Guangqian’s Shenghuo (Brainwashing) This 1978 book tells the story of a Chinese citizen who ended up in a mental hospital after writing “To Liberate the Central Plains” on the walls of his office. This book is a rare and detailed account of the “re-education” of prisoners who were told they were destined to serve the people. 3. Hua Yan’s Art of War Hua Yan is a well-known Chinese novelist who worked for the government and became an authority on military strategy. This book is something of a mix of philosophy and history, leading to its classification as banned in the early 1980s. The government banned The Art of War because of its detailed descriptions of techniques and strategies to win battles. 4. Ai Qing’s Radical Expression This Chinese writer gave it all up to go on the run from the government after writing “To the Activists of All Countries

The present invention is directed to a heterogeneous microfiltration membrane and to a process for the preparation of the same. It is known to prepare microfiltration membranes by contacting a polymer solution with a membrane support and evaporating the solvent in a cross flow apparatus. (See, for example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,833,386). The resulting membranes are characterized by a membrane thickness of the order of from 0.5 to 10 micrometers. It is also known to prepare "dual skinned" microfiltration membranes by contacting a polymer solution with a membrane support and then contacting the membrane with a solution of a nonsolvent in a cross flow apparatus. This results in membranes with two distinct zones on the surface. The major portion of the surface comprises the thin, porous surface skin. The remainder is a thin porous coat over the entire surface of the membrane. The average pore size of the porous surface skin is in the range of from 5 to 20 nanometers while the average pore size of the porous coating is less than 5 nanometers. It is also known to use at least two membrane supports to prepare "multi-lamellar" microfiltration membranes, i.e., microfiltration membranes with a plurality of distinct non-continuous layers on the surface. The number of distinct layers is from 2 to 3 (See German Pat. No. 1,192,115). These membranes are prepared from a polymer solution which is initially in the form of a multilayer sheet.
