However the .The event will have a number of presentations on some of New Mexico's best well-known species; water from the Rio Grande; and early vision testing. Conservationists hope the event will encourage a broad group of people from throughout the state to conserve the environment and to ensure that children can go to school with clean air, clean water and clean land. As part of that event, youth activists from Cochiti Pueblo and the Citizens Advisory Council for the Rio Grande who will present an action plan for the environment and its influence on children. The message of the event is: "The Rio Grande is a life-giver. We must protect it," said Eva Vázquez, executive director of the Cochiti Pueblo Cultural Center. Chico is the "living laboratory" of a big area called the Rio Grande Plains Region, which straddles the juncture of New Mexico and Texas. The region is home to the international wildlife refuge the Bosque del Apache, where the Rio Grande meets the Sabinal River, and the Yaque del Norte National Monument, which is home to more than 200 species of birds and wildlife, including alligators and jaguars.
