What's new:

The following is a discussion on one of my current projects. We're halfway through one of the classes and testing out a character. Basically it's an inherited character where the attributes and skills are balanced by the rules and flaws. It's a Rifter (like a Fireball does more damage but costs less Stamina) with the benefit of combat prone. Keep in mind all of this is just for one class - the rest are progressing and doing well. Here's the character, in order of present: Name: Zieger Netery Faction: Ungheli (Hunter) Race: Saurian (Bipedal Demon) Alignment: Neutral Good (Highlighted) Background: He's an Ungheli hunter by trade. He's fairly attractive and a bit of a womanizer. He's also a neophyte into religion, though he's fervently devout. The issue with his calling is that he's gifted in shamanism. He's also hunted recently, so he can speak to his persuasion (Improving another Persuade by +3) which should help with that. He's wanted to become a holy warrior almost from the beginning, but he's always been better at this. Game Experience: He's an unruly road sleeper, but actually that's a name for his driving. It helps the escapee identity. The City Snake cestum has its own versions of the snake's teeth. It actually has a set of iron teeth with mini spikes on the the inside. It's about as lethal as a knife. It's also been replaced with a taser/electric gun that's about as lethal. Wealth: He owns a nek (like a small sedan from the 80s) and a Raptor. Abilities: He has a relatively-low charisma, but a very high-to-earth charisma. He can change from regular to charming with only feat, an Intimidate, and an Ironic Intellect. Disadvantage: He's easily confused. He doesn't know his exact mental or physical stats and cannot differentiate between his mental and physical stats. Flaws: He's predisposed to charisma. He has little game refinement, and his urbanity pretty much gives him a +1 to INT rather than the +2 expected on a Dweller. Qualities: He's 1/2st of humanity and 1/2st of magic.

Speech disturbances in multiple system atrophy: A systematic review. The present study aimed to systematically review the literature investigating the clinical features and electrophysiological correlates of speech impairments in multiple system atrophy (MSA), and to evaluate the prevalence of speech disturbances in this disease. Three reviewers independently searched three databases from inception through May 2019, comprising studies that met the following criteria: (a) diagnosis of MSA according to El Escorial Diagnostic Criteria, (b) presence of speech impairments of any type (apraxia, dysarthria, dysphagia and dyspnoea), and (c) investigations on speech measures. A meta-analysis was performed on studies that assessed speech in MSA patients. Of the 443 papers found, 45 were eligible according to the search criteria. Of these, 39 studies assessed speech symptoms in 29 patients with MSA, reporting findings of the vast majority of studies on apraxia. Dysarthria (37%), dysphagia (35%) and dyspnoea (33%) were the most frequent speech symptoms in the literature, though data
