"In FIFA 21, we wanted to push the boundaries of the technology in a way that no-one had before," said Alex Thurley, Chief Technology Officer at EA Sports. "The team have delivered this with HyperMotion Technology, which now features the game's 'clocking' functionality, a first in the football genre. We hope players will enjoy an immersive, realistic and authentic experience with FIFA 22." "We believe the technology makes this game for gamers like no other in the industry," added Daniel Rutter, Technical Director at EA Sports. "As a result, we have been able to significantly improve on our previous generation of gameplay and physics, whilst completely redefining the execution of the camera." Motion capture data is collected from real-life players playing a complete high-intensity match - with no downtime - in a match suit that records movement, tackling, aerial duels and actions on-ball. The data collected from thousands of player actions is used to accurately mirror the player movements on the pitch to create an environment that is as immersive and convincing as possible, for a complete, authentic experience. The final game will only be available for PlayStation 4, Xbox One, Nintendo Switch and PC. The FIFA development team has revealed that FIFA 22 "introduces 'clocking' functionality as players move around the pitch. In FIFA 21, the cameras could only lock onto one player or object at any one time, but in FIFA 22 they can now be locked onto a number of players and objects simultaneously." The game will also feature new post-processing effects and animation tweaks. The goalkeepers' AI has been improved, while their face and body animations have been more lifelike. The players' ball skills have been improved and FIFA 22 introduces the ability to see all the information on the ball in certain positions on pitch. Players can now see more of their touchline run-ins. The controls on the pitch have also been overhauled, introducing new touches and better controller feel. Players will be able to score more shots using new AI techniques, with more attention and intelligence applied to players trying to hold onto the ball, as well as improved handling and crossing accuracy. The drag control on the in-game shots has also been improved, creating a more realistic feeling with an emphasis on shot speed. FIFA 21 broke new ground for the franchise by being the first FIFA to use the Frostbite engine and
