I have a URL like this but actually I want something like this so that I can use the id inside the database and retrieve some information. How can I do this? A: You'd pass that value in as a GET parameter, and retrieve it in your PHP as $id = $_GET['id']; (assuming you serve your PHP code from /project/ - if not, you may need to change the URL to be a relative link, e.g. Q: React: How to re-render on change of I have a react component which has a few inputs. The component needs to re-render when any of the inputs change. I know I can do this using componentWillReceiveProps which would change the props, but that seems like a lot of boilerplate. Is there a simpler way of doing this? A: You can also use onChange event (if you need only one): this.setState({param: e.target.value}) } /> If you need to handle many different types of inputs, consider adding event to via addEventListener. A: You can save this in a variable. var savedValue; savedValue = e.target.value } /> Now you can use this within your componentWillReceiveProps. componentWillReceiveProps(nextProps) {
