Patient-initiated medical consultations: a review of the literature and results of a controlled trial. Patients sometimes seek advice outside the written medical record in anticipation of developing a malignancy. To evaluate the effect of patient-initiated medical consultations on physician performance of diagnostic investigations, and to determine the frequency and type of patient-initiated medical consultations in a defined population. An investigator-conducted, prospective, observational, controlled trial (COT) with cross-over design. The medical records of every patient who attended the general outpatient clinic at The Royal Perth Hospital, Western Australia, between October 1999 and November 2000 were reviewed. Patients who developed signs or symptoms compatible with malignancy were contacted by telephone and the information was recorded in a structured interview. The final medical record and data were obtained from the treating medical practitioner. Of the 727 patients attending the general outpatient clinic in 1999 and 2000, 49 (6 cells and the disruption of the surrounding microvasculature. Although there is considerable evidence to suggest the role of inflammatory and immune cells in the modulation of renal tumor growth, cytokines are also essential mediators in renal tumor biology. Notably, it has recently been shown that the stromal cell-derived factor-1-CXC chemokine receptor 4/fractalkine, which leads to the recruitment of CXCL8-producing tumor infiltrating dendritic cells to the tumor site, is involved in tumor progression. In turn, cytokines can be secreted by the tumor cells themselves. High levels of fibroblast growth factor, platelet-derived growth factor and vascular endothelial growth factor, as well as their specific receptors, have been detected in renal carcinoma. In addition, angiogenesis inhibitors have been evaluated in the management of renal cell carcinoma. Sustained antitumor activities have been observed in patients with metastatic renal cell carcinoma treated with the monoclonal antibody bevacizumab. Efficacy has been documented with a combination of interleukin-10 and bevacizumab. The exact mechanisms whereby these cytokines exert their antitumor activities remain to be clarified. In addition, the possibility that these cytokines act as angiogenic factors has been demonstrated. All these data are consistent with the concept that the cytokine network is a key event in renal carcinoma.
