CCTV footage has emerged of the moment a woman was stabbed in an attempt to rob her at knife-point in south-east London. Police were called to the scene in Whitechapel, Wapping, at about 9.50am on Wednesday. It is believed the victim was walking towards her home in Southwark at the time of the attack. The woman was injured and taken to hospital by an air ambulance. No arrests have been made.

Q: WPF Image Name Template with namespace

I am writing a custom control using WPF. It is basically an Image Control with a few additional features. The class exposes a Image property which is of type Image. While I was writing the PropertyChangedEvent handler and the PropertyChangedEventArgs constructor, I figured out the following: If I bind my Image property to the image source property of Image (which is of type string) of my WPF application or a control which is part of the WPF application, the Image property will automatically resolve the source to the full name of the image (e.g. '..\Resources\Icons\Icon_54.png'). If I bind my Image property to the image source property of Image (which is of type object) of my WPF application or a control which is part of the WPF application, the Image property will automatically resolve the source to the Image Source property of the Image control. (The Image control exposes the Image Source property as a Property of type ImageSource.)

If I bind my Image property to the resource name of the resource file that contains the image (which is of type string), the Image property will not resolve the resource to the resource file and it will have to be
