Freedom of speech won't allow us to ban the internet. A free tool must never infringe any rights, especially the freedom of speech, When we feel like we want to ban a tool, the developer of it must be informed, We have no real source of knowledge. We analyze and try tools based on experience, but we can be wrong. We can't ban free software. Mozilla is the worst offender when it comes to the freedom to protest, We don't have real source of knowledge. We do not care for Google's search page guidelines. The intention of this article is not to create conflict, we just want to share the opinion of some of us. Why did we created this article? Most of the time we skip our search engines' toolbar searching the first result page. We don't want to have security issues, malware, spyware and stuff like that. We do not want to waste our time with poor quality results. Some important websites like Sharewhat and Copyhut are banned. We want to give our users the tool they need to find the videos we couldn't find. We don't want to be forced to make an "upside down" registration We don't want to provide support for a not software We feel like if we give the community a bad software, we will be bad Regards.
