Enabling layers After creating an image in any program, you must tell Photoshop that you want to use layers (most programs do so for you) and layer objects separately. Some software is called _non-layers_, which means that it's programmed to work without layers. To ensure that you can use layers and layer objects, you need to open the Layers panel with one of the following methods: * Choose Window⇒Layers to open the Layers panel shown in Figure 3-1. * Press Ctrl+Y (Windows) or -Y (Mac) to open the Layers panel. * Go to the Channels menu, shown in Figure 3-2, and click the Channels button (Windows) or (Mac). FIGURE 3-1: The Layers panel lists all the layers in the currently active document. FIGURE 3-2: Use the Channels menu to toggle layers on and off. Even though you _can_ create many layers without creating layers, as a beginner you'd probably create them all at once. To save space, you can save all your layers with the same name, which means that only the current image appears on the background, and you can see all the layers in each image. After you create more than one image, you can separate and save individual layers, assigning each a unique name.

Rattner: I thought the Islanders were going to win the Stanley Cup Lecture: Q & A with Robert Rattner There are four words that describe the Islanders' season: "It's over." On Friday, the Islanders played their last game in Nassau Coliseum, a 2-1 loss to the Montreal Canadiens. The door has closed on a 53-year Stanley Cup championship drought; the season is over. There are about 700 business decisions to make in the next three months before the team goes on another extended playoff hiatus. On today's Talk to the Star, we asked the Islanders president Robert Rattner, who has been with the team for 25 years, what questions he's asked himself since June 15, when the team finally clinched its first Eastern Conference title. What are some of those questions? We're going to ask him. Caller: The most important question I've asked myself: Who's going to be the guy (managing general manager) next year? Rattner: I think it's probably a good time to start thinking that way. Some of our best players are going to leave. Caller: Name names. Rattner: Well, I'd suggest the best name is going to be Mike Milbury, then it is going to be Scott Gordon. Caller: Do you sense there's a change coming? Rattner: I think we're going to get a lot of good ideas for next year. Caller: Are any of the players going to leave? Rattner: If you look at the role of Peter (Brunette) in the team, he's still going to be a member of the organization. He's now playing in Columbus. Dan Gartner, who I believe will be a serious candidate, will be playing in Houston. He's now playing in North America. You can't say we're going to keep all our players now. We're going to have a lot of good ideas that will come forward and we're going to sort that out and it will help us make decisions next year. Caller: Look around at all the hockey people you see on TV, they're all saying it
