, 2011. Announcing the new Ubuntu 12.04 LTS - borisk ===== SwellJoe As a Mac user, I'm very excited to see Ubuntu on the desktop at all. I never expected Ubuntu to be a serious contender on the desktop, especially as Microsoft started to build Windows 8 apps, but it's a great stride forward. I won't even touch the dock vs. app dock controversy, but I think we're doing better. I'm also really impressed with the emphasis on collaboration, free software, and the improvement on accessibility and inclusivity. ~~~ joezydeco Read Joel's post on Apple vs. Ubuntu: [ubuntu.htm...](ubuntu.html) ~~~ SwellJoe I'll have to read it. I've read a lot of crap about Ubuntu lately, and it's always seemed to be a knee-jerk response whenever there's a new generation of Linux distributions that competes with Android or iOS. I hope I've completely missed something and Ubuntu is doing a lot of good things. I only interact with Ubuntu users via IRC, but the community seems very nice. ----- alexgartrell While it's awesome to see it hit the desktop and finally be a REAL distribution, I'm concerned that Canonical has too much influence with the new Unity interface. How much of that transition is driven by them? This is a huge change. If you were to open up a fresh install of Precise and make it your desktop you would be visually and conceptually lost. You might have to figure out the menus and the app launcher first, but then the interface becomes familiar. If you have to re-learn the interface, then something is wrong. I'm not saying that it's bad, but this is the most important interface change in Ubuntu's history since the last release. Hopefully the designers work out all of the kinks and realize how important this is. It's going to be difficult to learn. -----
