Q: Find diagonal of matrix from given element Is it possible to find the diagonal of a square matrix without using a loop? Specifically, given a diagonal element x , I want to get the diagonal of the matrix from it. If this can be done efficiently, I want to know how. Note: This is not homework. I am trying to implement my own implementation of a multi-stage FFT algorithm. A: Consider the fact that The derivative of a matrix with respect to its i^{th} column is the i^{th} row Consider that the matrix is symmetrical... The derivative of a matrix with respect to its i^{th} row is the i^{th} column So all you have to do is implement that operation -- and you don't need a loop. There's a package in Mathematica called DDiagonal that can do exactly this. A: $N[\text{Det}[\text{Normalize}[A] // \text{Flatten} // \text{Transpose}]]$ gives the diagonal of a matrix A. You can also use DDiagonal and Det to get matrices out of the diagonal. UNPUBLISHED UNITED STATES COURT OF AP
