Severe pediatric respiratory syncytial virus disease in Mexico. Respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) is a leading cause of severe pediatric respiratory disease worldwide. Currently, there are no data on RSV disease in the Mexican pediatric population. We describe the largest series of RSV infections reported in Mexico. Respiratory samples were collected from children hospitalized for acute respiratory infections and their management was reviewed retrospectively. RSV and influenza A H1N1 detection was done by real-time PCR. Epidemiological data were collected from medical records. From September 2012 to March 2015, a total of 120 patients were included, with an incidence rate of 0.5 per 10,000 children. The median age was 19 months, but 51.7% of patients were under 6 months. Most patients had a history of prematurity or chronic lung disease (n = 106, 89.3%). The median age at admission was 3 months, and 58.3% of children required supplemental oxygen. Clinical signs and symptoms included cough, fever, bronchiolitis, pneumonia, and apnea. The most common co-infection was influenza A H1N1. Of the patients, 79.2% required non-invasive ventilation and 7.5% were extubated. Overall, 90.8% of children were discharged and only 7.5% had to be admitted to a specialized care unit. Three patients died (2.5%) and another 12.5% were admitted to 6d1f23a050
