hi, 1). first thing that i'll suggest to do is to re-save your files as.pdf (as it is more like a physical cd) and then re-open them in a more popular applications such as adobe acrobat,.. 2). you can also change the file extension from.eps to.pdf,. but the file size will increase. if you want to compress it, you can use ghostery to hide the ads. 3). don't hesitate to ask your questions here. 4). if you require any further help, contact me again. i look forward to help you. hi, 1). if you are familiar with the file format to some extent you can still use it directly. but it is not advisable to do so. the eps format is an old format of the graphics file format, and for use in photoshop or other applications is a different format. if you're working with pdf files, the format is considerably more versatile and easier to use for the regular work of journalists, designers, and manufacturers. you'll still be able to open them in eps format, but make sure that the file type is correct when saving: epsf in addition to the usual eps. i am not very familiar with eps and i am writing to see if you can help with a problem. i have created a file in adobe photoshop, but if i try and open it in another application on a different computer the content doesn't match the drawing. i have searched on the internet and i have not been able to find an answer. can you help? i am fairly new to graphic design and i'm producing a few logos for a charity i'm working on. i have created them in photoshop and they are all saved as eps. when i take them into f.i. a non-adobe prosumer application (bamboo), and import them they don't appear the same as they do in photoshop. is there a common reason why this happens? any help would be appreciated.
