more unlockable rewards include more costumes and drum sets but also objects like drum sticks and tambourines, with little baumanias hanging from the sides of the stage allowing you to add some colour to your performance. here's some of what's been added in. i'm not really into drumming but this seems to have some useful gameplay, even if just for challenge. before, you'd always be challenged by the soundtrack. now you can drum and listen along to the song while you're doing so, if you find it challenging enough. that's the kind of thing you do to challenge yourself, right? there's also all the taiko battle modes, now with new songs and levels, challenge modes and more. i'm sure once these are sorted out we'll have a whole new way of playing in this genre. i'll probably try to get a hold of all these things before getting stuck into the online modes. taiko battle is almost my favourite thing about this game. i mean, it's just that unique style of challenge and competition in a game, just how much fun it is to compete against yourself and others. the online modes are also back, and seem more updated than they ever have. well, at least all the online modes apart from one. it's still another addictive mode to play with friends, which is always good, but the online multiplayer is much better than it's ever been and a lot easier to use. i haven't tried it out in full yet. again, i'll come to that after i've tried to play for a little while. taiko no tatsujin+ is very challenging and the player needs to work hard to earn medals. to earn medals, players will need to beat other players in taiko no tatsujin+ chans world tour. the player can play a range of tournaments including tournament, world tour, taiko no tatsujin+ festival and the score attack mode. the player will have to play the drumming to the beat to earn points and beat other players.
