Chidambaram's wife Nalini Chidambaram has been named as a respondent in a whistleblower complaint alleging that her organisation repeatedly violated tax laws. It has been alleged that NTMA, a tax consultancy arm of Nalini's government-run National Task Force for AIDS, violated the Income Tax Act by paying huge sums to big names in the entertainment and television industry. The complaint has alleged that NTMA paid astronomical amounts for entertainment projects, saying Nalini had a "vague understanding" of the "fraudulent activities" of her NGO. The documents in this complaint were leaked by anonymous whistleblower. This is not the first time Nalini Chidambaram has been accused of dubious land deals. In 2006, the land allotted to the NTMA was found to be swampy, and subsequently acquired by the Nalini-run NGO at a highly inflated price. The allotment was later transferred to Chidambaram's son Karti Chidambaram, whose income has been alleged to be inflated. When asked about the allegations, Nalini Chidambaram said she was "surprised" that her name had been mentioned. She denied any wrongdoing and said the allegations were false. In 2006, the NTFA was accused of paying Rs 72 lakh for film awards, a sum it claimed was to promote the AIDS awareness campaign, despite the fact that this form of advertisement is banned. The court case against Nalini Chidambaram's NGO was related to allegedly fraudulent land allotments. When she was removed as the general secretary of the NTMA earlier this year, Nalini Chidambaram was only paid for 15 months of the previous contract of Rs 2.1 crore and was asked to return the rest of the money. NTMA was hired in July 2008 to
