In mammals, the extensive crosstalk between neurons and hemopoietic cells is essential for the successful development and function of the brain and blood. A growing body of evidence suggests that this communication takes place in the bone marrow, the only organ which contains hemopoietic cells and neural stem cells. The principal investigator hypothesizes that this extracellular environment is where hemopoietic cells deliver a message to neural stem cells that triggers the differentiation of the latter. The principal investigator will employ genetic techniques to inactivate mutant genes that disrupt the communication between hemopoietic cells and neural stem cells in their natural environment. The specific aim is to test whether the mutation of an essential gene that is expressed in hemopoietic
