Can you imagine being able to design for the web with any web-enabled device? That is what Mobile technology will allow designers to do in 2013. This is a major change from simply designing for the web browser or screen, where a recent redesign means that a designer can create points of entry and exit for the device. By adding a new "app" or "site" interface and making the appropriate content, a designer can create an experience that will work on any device. Mobile technology will also allow designers to move away from the desktop model and reach an audience that is no longer limited by a single screen. A big change for Adobe Photoshop is the introduction of the Adobe Sensei (it's pronounced AI) platform. In 2012, Adobe added to the design tools they were laying down the groundwork for the future of a unified platform across the Creative Suite line up. In 2013, they took that a step further to add the ability to train the AI to understand what you are trying to accomplish through Photoshop and even offers to give you a project that is more in tune with what you are trying to achieve. Starting in March 2020, while Photoshop is having some somewhat expected service issues, Adobe will introduce two new features: Workflow and AI-powered adjustments. The Workflow feature is Adobe's version of Google's Assistant and means you will be able to ask "How can I..." or "What should I..." using your voice to get three-minute video demonstrations of Photoshop's powerful tools. For example, types of adjustments you can perform to a particular image. These two new features represent the hope that users who are otherwise not sold on Creative Cloud will have a reason to use an Adobe subscription. The other new feature relates to all of the points made above regarding AI filters and adjustments. The idea is to have these AI filters that can perform all sorts of image manipulations across an image and across the masses of users. With AI, these tools will be able to quickly generate lots of new edits.
