A browser usually has one or more rendering engines, such as Gecko, V8, Blink, Presto, Ion, and WebKit. If you have a web page that has content that isn't compatible with the rendering engine on your browser or an outdated version of the rendering engine, you will experience rendering glitches or overall slowness. In addition, some web pages are incompatible with current web browsers and don't load. That's called web compatibility.

Inversion is another fantastic feature that was included in version 25. Inversion works on the 'invert' command that changes the image or just the highlights and shadows to hide the existing image and reveal a new one. Give it a try and see what happens. To access Inversion head to Layer & Adjustments > Invert. Also, try Drop Shadows and Drop Shadows & Shadows to for some more creative effects. Sometimes, further editing is needed. Although this feature is more of a future look, you can now control the tones of an image in Photoshop with Bump Map. This feature gives you depth, rotational and zoom control in the image as well as adding new gradients for endless options. Bump Map is hard to find in the work area, so you might have to head to the Brush tool and select Surface via search or by pressing B on the keyboard. Next, choose New and Bump Map. To access the Bump Map feature, go to Image > Adjustments > Bump Map & press OK. Continue and test it out some more. Creating an HDR image can be done in different ways. There are enhancements that can be done manually by going to your levels panel and dragging shadows and highlights to a new image (Images > Adjustments > Brightness/Contrast); or using the Merge to HDR feature (it defaults to the new Highlights & Shadows output). Adobe also has a Merge to HDR tool with a brand new interface. In the capture tab, you can add multiple images or different adjustments then choose 'merge to HDR' from the image menu option. There's also an Auto option and the new feature is even more streamlined than the one described above.
