The most important aspects of a camera are the lenses and the abilities to photograph. The tools that we carry with us are the lenses to help us identify interesting and telling subjects. And the same is true for Photoshop! It works with the colors on our subject to help us create striking images that are outstanding in quality. Just as with how our lenses work, the tools you have in your bag can help you make an image sing. There are many ways of using the tools in Photoshop. The basics will look like they are taught in elementary school, where using similar colors of a subject make their colors stand out and highlights the spotlight. Being an online tool, Photoshop can even work like a mirror for you to see yourself. The Fill tool, formerly known as Paint bucket, is a very useful tool. With a few clicks, you can fill any object with the color of your choice. It can be used to create simple backgrounds and to help bring out the colors of your subject. It can even be used to create patterns for your images. Adobe Photoshop also has the Gradient Tools, which allow you to control the blend between two colors, hair colors for instance, becoming lighter than the two colors they represent, one on top of the other. Then there is the Lasso tool which is also acquired in elementary school. Think of this tool as a cross between magic markers, a brush, a net, and the Eye Dropper Tool. With the Lasso tool, imagine you use your brush as your selection tools to trace and select an area of your image. The transparent part enables you to see what is underneath, which allows you to remove that area, if you desire. In case of bad things happening in this world, you can use this tool as a great retouching tool to remove unwanted elements from your image. The same goes for your mask which is also acquired in elementary school. e3d0a04c9c
