It is based on the Passion of Jesus by the German author and poet Novalis. The film depicts the passion of Jesus, as it is described in the canonical gospels, with a focus on. Tobacco consumption represents the single greatest preventable cause of morbidity and mortality in the world today. For decades, significant effort has been directed toward the development of non-tobacco nicotine delivery systems. However, to date, no alternative to nicotine has been able to match the exquisite hedonic efficacy delivered by a cigarette. Of particular concern, is the paradox of low tar and nicotine. It is also critical to develop safer tobacco products that provide the same advantages of the more dangerous, high tar cigarettes. The aims of the proposed study are: 1) to identify and characterize novel candidate compounds that mimic the effects of nicotine in a laboratory assay of subjective satiety (an indication of hedonic efficacy); 2) to compare the efficacy of candidate compounds, both alone and in combination with nicotine, using a behavioral test of nicotine self-administration; 3) to determine whether the efficacy of candidate compounds in the self-administration test is related to subjective satiety; 4) to measure blood and brain levels of candidate compounds following repeated i.v. administration, to determine whether oral administration will produce a reliable, predictable blood level, and to provide a dose-response curve for candidate compounds; and 5) to determine whether the efficacy of candidate compounds in the self-administration test is related to the activity of candidate compounds in an established pharmacological model of nicotine reward in primates. These studies will provide the foundation for the development of a small molecule therapy for nicotine addiction. PUBLIC HEALTH RELEVANCE: Tobacco consumption represents the single greatest preventable cause of morbidity and mortality in the world today. The proposed studies seek to identify and characterize novel candidate compounds that mimic the effects of nicotine in a laboratory assay of subjective satiety (an indication of hedonic efficacy). The proposed studies will provide the foundation for the development of a small molecule therapy for nicotine addiction.
